Dedication

I am very pleased to dedicate this book to a long-time political activist living in Vancouver, Kimball Cariou.

I first knew Kimball when we were students at the University of Alberta. Almost always, we were on opposite sides of every issue. However, even then, I had to recognize that Kimball was a person of principle. If he seemed to be unyielding, it is because he would not compromise for the purpose of political expediency. Over the years, he has continued to be active in politics at local, provincial, federal and international levels. He continues to speak out and write on issues of importance.

Given his ability to analyse issues and his great compassion for people, if he had made a few compromises, Kimball could have had a very successful political career at any level of his choosing. However, like so many unsung heroes in politics, Kimball is content to put principles before personal gain.

I have been interested and active in politics since I was 15 years old. In that time, I have seen plenty that could have turned me off. However, it is because there are people that put principle before personal gain that I have the hope I need to stay involved in politics and even take occasional political risks to take stands on controversial issues.

Kimball and I do not always agree. We belong to different political parties and have many differences even yet. However, I have enjoyed some good discussions with him and he has influenced my thinking on more than a few issues. Maybe, his political involvement has been a success after all, for surely there are others whose thinking he has influenced in a positive way.

I am glad that I have again made acquaintance with Kimball in the past five or so years. I am pleased to call Kimball "my friend"— and maybe to be a friend to someone else is the highest political office to which anyone can aspire.

Introduction

I first heard about Vancouver civic politics, while visiting relatives in Vancouver during Easter time in 1969. My relatives talked, with rather mixed opinions about the Mayor of the day, Tom Campbell. The next time I heard a great deal about Vancouver civic politics was in the summer of 1972. During that summer I was working (washing dishes) at the Jasper Park Lodge. One of my fellow workers was from Vancouver. Since I already had several years of political involvement behind me, our discussions often turned to politics and politicians. This fellow worker told me about one alderman in particular, an alderman who often stood alone on council and who was not afraid to speak out for for what he believed was the truth. That alderman was Harry Rankin.

Hearing about these two individuals made it clear that local government politics in Vancouver was (and still is) very exciting and very different from politics in other cities. So, for the years to come, I continued to follow civic politics in Vancouver off and on. This was not hard as Vancouver is frequently in the news.

Many local authority politicians in Vancouver have become quite prominent in Canadian affairs either in local government or as they have moved on to federal and provincial politics.

Consider Kim Campbell, a former school trustee who went on to serve in both provincial and federal politics, becoming Prime Minister of Canada for a time. Mike Harcourt and Gordon Campbell later became premiers of British Columbia. Angus MacInnis, Gerry McGeer, Tillie Rolston Lyle Telford, Arnold Webster, Grace McCarthy, Art Phillips, Art Cowie, and Libby Davies are among a long list of people who also had political careers at the federal or provincial level.

However, even those who have served only at the local government level have had interesting careers and attract some interest. I already mentioned Tom Campbell and Harry Rankin. It would also be interesting if one could spend an hour such people as Helena Gutteridge, Tom Alsbury, Setty Pendakur, the Rev. Bernice Gerard, George Puil and Tim Louis to name a few. Tom Alsbury's career is particularly interesting since he served on parks commission, city council and school board. He also served as mayor. I was very fortunate these past two summers to meet and discuss issues with school trustee Jane Bouey— and as a teacher I was impressed with her close involvement with a wide range of education issues.

Then there are those who never won election, but still attract some interest. One such person who interested me while doing this project, although she never was successfully elected, was Effie Jones.

Vancouver's party system adds to the interest.

The participation of parties and slates in Vancouver politics goes back as far as 1886, when the Knights of Labour participated in the election. Over the years, other citizens', labour and community groups participated in and ran candidates in civic elections. Angus MacInnis was one of the first to be elected. A member of the Independent Labour Party, he was elected to both the school board and the city council before becoming a member of parliament.

However, it was in the 1936 elections when party politics began in a big way, when the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation entered candidates, electing three members to council, and one each to the school board and park board. The next year saw the formation of the Vancouver Civic Non-Partisan Association, generally called the Non-Partisan Association (NPA). (But occasionally the NPA is called by other names by various commentators. One political columnist in the 1950s referred to the NPA as No Possible Alternative, while another in the 1970s called it the Neanderthal Partisan Association.)

Over the years, it is fair to say that the NPA has been the voice of the business and pro-development community. It has included a broad coalition of Liberals, Social Creditors, Conservatives and those who support the Reform Party/Canadian Alliance. However, it has included members of the C.C.F and N.D.P..

Since the formation of the NPA, many other groups tried to challenge its dominant position, but none were successful until 1968. In that year, both The Electors' Action Movement (TEAM) and the Committee of Progressive Electors, now called the Coalition of Progressive Electors (COPE) were formed.

TEAM enjoyed some immediate success, taking over control of the Mayor's chair, city council, school board and parks board in the 1972 elections, when the NPA was in a period of decline. However, it soon became apparent that while TEAM offered some fresh new faces and approaches to government, they represented some of the same interests. In time, TEAM slowly began to disintegrate as its members left the party for various reasons.

COPE enjoyed less success at the beginning and for many years, only Harry Rankin was elected. However, their policies represented substantial differences of philosophy from the politics of the NPA. In 1980, they experienced a breakthrough, electing 10 people to various offices and taking control of the school board for the first time. Fortunes for COPE have had many ups and downs since then. They have found it to their advantage in different elections to work co-operatively in formal or informal coalitions with other labour, ecological or community centred groups including the Civic Independents, the New Democratic Party, and the Vancouver Civic Greens. Eventually these strategies helped COPE win the Mayors chair, and majorities on city council, school board and parks board in 2002. However, the NPA remains a strong force.

One of the great changes in Vancouver civic politics has been the fact that the make-up of council and the boards has changed dramatically over the years to reflect the cosmopolitan nature of the city.

For many years, to be elected, one needed to be a white male, normally with a British surname and with a background in business or the professions. Occasionally, a person with a worker background might be elected, for example, Angus MacInnis, elected to city council in 1925 after serving on the school board. However, it was not until 1937 that a woman, Helena Gutteridge, was elected to city council — and the next woman was not elected until December 1947 (although the first women were elected to the school board in 1897 and to the Parks commission in 1927).

It is also more common now for citizens from racial and ethnic minorities to be elected to political office at all levels in Vancouver. Furthermore, members from Vancouver's Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered (LGBT) community are also elected to political office and enjoy wide support across the entire city.

It is the view of this writer that these changes enhance the democratic nature of Vancouver politics.

Vancouver politics will continue to change. Some suggested changes, such as bringing back the ward system or encouraging neighbourhood-centred politics are positive changes that can enhance democracy.

Of course, other possible changes could be a mistake. For example, any visitor to Vancouver has to be impressed with the outstanding parks and recreation system of the city. I have enjoyed my visits to Stanley Park, Queen Elizabeth (Little Mountain) Park and Vanier Park, impressed with the tremendous amount of work that goes into maintaining and enhancing those urban green spaces. It is my belief that having an elected Parks Commission that does not need to balance parks against other infrastructure and municipal demands has helped to ensure the development and enhancement of the park system. I have heard suggestions that the Parks Commission could be abolished or replaced with an appointed committee. I believe that would be a serious mistake.

It is my hope that this book will be useful to researchers and students of Vancouver history. It is not, however, a history, merely a source of information that may assist people in writing the political history of Vancouver or the biographies of some of Vancouver's civic leaders. There are people named in these pages that had profound effects, for better or for worse, on the history and development of Vancouver, its cities and parks. It is my hope that others will take the time to tell their stories.

I regret that I could not include everything that I would have wanted to include. It would have been great, for example, if I could have included all election results back to 1886 or members of the License Commission who were elected many years ago. However, my resources, time and abilities limited what I could do. I would, however, refer any researcher to the Vancouver City Archives with its excellent resources and helpful staff.

For me, researching and creating this book has been an exciting adventure.

Acknowledgments

I decided to attempt this project in the fall of 2002, thinking that if I was able to actually complete this project, it would likely take me two years to do so. Having already done a similar project on Edmonton and having worked with our municipal historian, Gerry Bussieres, to do one on Fort McMurray/Wood Buffalo, I was well aware that there were many factors that could keep me from completing the project, having never lived in Vancouver being one of them.

And frankly, there were a few times when I felt it was just not going to come together. The more information I was able to get, the more gaps I seemed to discover and the more problems I found in ensuring my information was accurate and complete.

Fortunately, several letters, e-mails, consultations with internet information and a holiday trip to Vancouver allowed me to complete this book. And may I say that there were expenses that I did not anticipate at the start of the project, but projects like this are a labour of love— a hobby— for me.

The following were of assistance to me, not only in completing this project, but also in learning the researcher's craft:

- The City of Vancouver Archives, including Angela Schiwy (I am likely the only person on Earth that would think of spending a day in the Archives as a wonderful vacation activity).
- The Vancouver Sun and Province Infoline, who were very good in promptly sending copies of past election results and other information. They also answered a large number of questions during the time I was researching.
- Paul Heraty of City of Vancouver Corporate Communications for assisting me with recent election results and for pointing me in the right directions to get information.
- Kimball Cariou, who provided me with information on COPE and who sent me a copy of 1968 - 1993 COPE: Working for Vancouver, by John Church, Elaine Decker Gary Onstad, and Ben Swankey.
- The websites on the internet during the 2002 elections for the Coalition of Progressive Electors, the Vancouver Civic Non-Partisan Association, the Vancouver Civic Greens, and the Vancouver Civic Action TEAM.
- Mary Ann Murphy of the British Columbia Legislative Library for assisting me with finding information on the history of M.L.A.s elected from Vancouver.
- The Canadian Parliamentary Guide, which was my source of information on Vancouver's Members of Parliament.
- Bill Fraser of the Vancouver School Board for sending information on past school boards.
- The Vancouver Public Library, another one of those places that this person likes to visit on a vacation (and believe me, it is worth visiting).
- The Canadian Encyclopedia (c) 1988 by Hurtig Publishers Ltd. of Edmonton. Sadly, that publishing house is no more. It is a shame as it was truly dedicated to pride in this country and to Canadian history and writing.
- Demographia, one of several sources I consulted while trying to get an accurate historical picture of Vancouver's historical population.

If there are errors or omissions in this book, alas, I alone must take "credit" for those. It is my hope that the information is as accurate as possible and useful to future researchers.

About the Author

Wayne Douglas Madden was born in Edmonton, Alberta on April 24th, 1952. He was educated with the Edmonton Separate School System (graduating in 1970), the University of Alberta (B.Ed., 1974) and the University of San Francisco (M.A., 1989). He moved to Fort McMurray in 1977 to teach elementary school with the Catholic public school system in that community. He currently teaches children in grade four.

Wayne enjoys writing and commenting on political and social issues and is a regular writer of letters to the editor, particularly to the Fort McMurray Today. He has completed several other books of political and historical research including: The Canadian Guide of Leadership and Electoral History, Canadian Socialist and Labour M.P.s and M.L.A.s, Canadian Women M.P.s and M.L.A.s, Edmonton's Elected Representatives, and The Crisis in the Left—and the Way Out. Working with the Wood Buffalo municipal historian, he co-authored Fort McMurray & Wood Buffalo Elected Representatives. These books, though not commercially available, have been distributed in small numbers.

Wayne is involved personally in political action and is a member of the New Democratic party. However, most of his political action is outside of his political party. He is also active in faith and church interests as a member of the Anglican communion.

Other hobbies and interests include family history; history; coin/stamp collecting; gardening; railways, trains and model railways; urban studies and issues; and travel. Approaching retirement, he is debating the comparative merits of retirement in Edmonton or Vancouver.

Errata

Upon completing this work, the following two errors were found:

1. page D- 8: The Board of Parks Commissioners for 1932 was deleted. The board for that year was as follows:

- 1958 • Vancouver City Council is increased to the Mayor and ten Aldermen elected at large.

- 1966 • Method of annual elections and electing members of the Council and boards for staggered terms is replaced with a system of biennial elections in which all members are elected in even number years.

- 1967 • Greater Vancouver Regional District is formed to handle all metropolitan issues.

- 1974 • Board of Parks and Public Recreation is renamed as the Board of Parks and Recreation.

- 1974 and 1976 • Vancouver's representatives to the Greater Vancouver Regional District are elected.

- 1990 • Terms of council and boards is changed from two years to three years.

- 1993 • Title of Alderman is changed to councillor.

- 2002 • Following the election of the Coalition of Progressive Electors, options to reform Vancouver's system of representative government are considered, including bringing back a ward system and increasing the number of city councillors.

Political Parties and Slates

There is a misconception that political parties do not exist in most municipal governments. However, while it is true that most municipal governments do not have formal political parties, the real fact is that political party activity does exist in most large and medium sized municipalities and school boards— and even in many smaller communities.

Members of the federal and provincial political parties often choose local authority government as their field of activity and give support to fellow party members who seek local office. Leaders in provincial governments often make subtle (or not so subtle) hints that certain civic and school board leaders are not their choice or they encourage support for those whose policies will be consistent with the policies of their government. Once elected to a local government authority, members of the same federal/provincial political party often form an alliance in order to work co-operatively on certain goals, programs and policy objectives. For many politicians, local politics is the first step to a career in federal or provincial politics and government.

Furthermore, natural alliances, based on policy goals, form on municipal councils or school boards (and Parks Commission in the case of Vancouver). For example, in a typical municipal council, several members will place a high value on business and industrial development. These people will work co-operatively to approve most developments as quickly as possible and seek reduction in regulations affecting development and zoning. Others will place a high value on municipal planning and neighbourhood quality of life issues. These people will work co-operatively to ensure a stringent approval process for new developments and maximum neighbourhood participation in these decisions.

On school boards, there may be a group seeking a balanced budget and they will be prepared to make cuts and hard decisions affecting staffing and programming in order to keep the budget balanced. Another group may be prepared to deficit budget for a time in order to ensure the protection of certain special education programs or to preserve an inner city school that has unique programming.

Councillors, trustees and candidates also get support (votes, campaign workers and campaign funds) from interest groups and individuals based on the stands they take on issues. This core support remains consistent or increases from election to election as a local politician gains experience and shows consistency in her or his political positions.

However, formal party systems are rare in municipal government. People often prefer to think that their councillors or trustees are "independents". Parties and slates were more common at one time. For example, the City of Edmonton once had the Citizen's Committee, a long history of involvement by the Canadian Labour Party, the Urban Reform Group—Edmonton, the Edmonton Voters' Association and several other groups. All these are history now. On occasion, a group may form for one election, either to run or endorse candidates for a particular reason. In 1995, the Spirit of Edmonton formed with the goal of bringing about major changes in the city council. In the same year, Fort McMurray saw the formation of the Committee to Save our Catholic Schools. This group endorsed three candidates they felt would change the nature of debate and decision-making in the Catholic public school system.

In this respect, Vancouver is unique. While parties and slates have disappeared in other cities and municipalities, the party system in Vancouver has remained strong. In fact, although there was a time in the 1950s and early 1960s when the party system did have a reduced influence, it has general been very difficult for independents to win election. However, it is clear at this time, the nomination of a local political party or slate is necessary if a candidate is to have any chance of election. Newer parties also seem to have very little chance of success and disappear after one or two elections.

The participation of parties, community groups slates in Vancouver politics goes back as far as 1886, when the Knights of Labour participated in the election. Over the years, other citizens', labour and community groups participated in and ran candidates in civic elections. Angus MacInnis was one of the first to be elected. A member of the Independent Labour Party, he was elected to both the school board and the city council before becoming a member of parliament.

However, it was in the 1936 elections when party politics began in a big way, when the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation entered candidates, electing three members to council, and one each to the school board and park board. The next year saw the formation of the Vancouver Civic Non-Partisan Association, generally called the Non-Partisan Association (NPA). That party has been a dominant party in Vancouver civic politics for most years since then. In fact, there are several elections in which achieving the nomination of the NPA guaranteed election to the school board. Losing the nomination of the NPA often meant defeat in the ensuing election, even for some very popular individuals. For a few elections, the only party was the NPA and some independents did get elected.

In 1968, the Committee of Progressive Electors, now the Coalition of Progressive Electors (COPE) entered Vancouver civic politics. COPE has worked either alone or with other groups such as the Civic New Democratic Party and the Vancouver Civic Greens to advocate an alternative point of view to that held by the NPA.

The following is a list of parties, slates, and endorsing groups, who have run candidates for election since 1936, along with abbreviations used in this book:

Percentage Voter Turnout in General Elections Since 1936

I consider that one of the greatest tragedies in our democratic system is the fact that voter turnout in local authority elections is rarely above 50%. This has been a historical problem.

When people think about it, there is not one day of their lives they are not affected by the decisions made by local authority governments. Whether it is the way you travel to work, the playground up the street where your children go to play, the schools in which they learn, the water that comes out of your tap, garbage collection or local health services, all are affected in some way by decisions made by local government authorities. Yet, even in elections with controversial issues, the number of voters coming out to vote is low. This is a serious problem and serious thinking is needed to find a solution.

The following is a summary of voter turnouts in general elections since 1936. Source of information includes the election results as printed in the Vancouver Sun/Province, and information on the City of Vancouver Archives website. Percentages are rounded to the nearest whole percent. Prior to 1966, although elections were held each year, the Mayor was elected in even number years only. A mayor was also elected in 1947 after the death of Mayor Gerald McGeer.
